superlinearly, as he had accidently skipped from one μ to the other, turning the word into κοιμωμενους.

<sup>a</sup>Obviously, as κοιμενους is an error for κοιμωμενους, κοιμωμενους doesn't mean anything. The correction to κοιμωμενους gives the translation "asleep".

Lucus 22:50b-56a

<sup>a</sup>It appears that the scribe was either copying from an exemplar which didn't contain verse 51 itself, or the scribe, through homoeoteleuton, skipped from the ov of δεξιον (right) to the ov of αυτου (his), which appears at the end of verse 51 in every other manuscript.

<sup>a</sup>This manuscripts appears to have a very truncated version of verse 61 that isn't seen in other manuscripts, having only four out of twenty-one words the same with other Greek manuscripts. It also completely misses out verse 62 for no apparent reason other than scribal carelessness.
